

Real-time Resilience Strategies for Living in Lockdown.

As of 18 August, 2021, we're back in lockdown, re-experiencing turmoil, anxiety, or even a crisis planning buzz (for some, yes!). We know this will change as we ride the resilience rollercoaster of lockdown and alert level changes.

We've been here before and know how to do this. In case you've forgotten, we've dusted off our brief guide to psychological coping during the Covid-19 pandemic. It's based on the best of science and our own experiences in emergency management and resilience training here in Aotearoa NZ and internationally. These are practical strategies we've seen help.

- 1 Choose where you focus your attention. Even at the best of times, humans are hard-wired to notice threats and weakness. During the worst of times it is more important than ever for our psychological health to tune into what's still good in your world. Psychologists call this 'benefit finding' and it is a key resilience skill. Start your days or meetings with a quick fire round of sharing good stuff – this also builds connection. Using the hashtag #htgs ('hunt the good stuff' originated in the US Army's Military Resilience Training) works well here.
- 2 Deliberately seek out the people (and do the stuff) that make you happy. Research shows how vital experiencing positive emotions is for our resilience. Negative emotions are contagious, and prolonged feelings of helplessness are strongly associated with depression. Given negative emotions and experiences stick to us like Velcro while positive emotions and experiences bounce off like Teflon, aim to punctuate your days, evenings, weeks and weekends with as many positive emotion experiences as possible. Barb Fredrickson from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill identifies ten different positive emotions to consider: love, joy, gratitude, serenity, interest, hope, pride, amusement, inspiration and awe. Frequency, not longevity, is key.
- 3 Strong and supportive relationships are the number one predictor of wellbeing, across the lifespan. Maintaining those connections during times of crisis and challenge is more important than ever. Feeling isolated from others is strongly related to depression, anxiety and other forms of mental distress. If you can't catch up with your key supportive people face to face right now, find other ways of doing so. By now, most of us are skype, zoom, or social media app experts. If not, ask someone to help you get started.
- 4 Keep supportive daily routines or create new ones if you're now holed up at home. "As Normal as Possible, as Flexible as Necessary" is one colleague's mantra for these times. Maintaining regular routines (meal times, bedtimes, exercise, work etc.) tells our brains it's safe to dial that stress response back down and prevents us from feeling more anxious. But, unprecedented times call for unprecedented responses: be prepared to have your best plans change, and open-minded enough to conjure up or accept new and different ways of doing things.
- 5 Focus on what matters, and what you can control. Concentrate all your attention and resources (psychological, social, physical, emotional, knowledge) on the things that matter and that you can actually influence. Easy to write, hard to do we know, but worrying about things you cannot change will only upset you and frustrate you further.
- 6 Watch your media diet – keep using the "helping or harming" test. Take a good look at your media intake over a 24 period and ask yourself, "is reading these articles, watching these videos, or reviewing these headlines, helping or harming the way I'm feeling and functioning?" Don't let those images, videos and notifications invade your day, your head, or your world. If the global news is making you feel overwhelmed, turn it off. Claim back some control by switching them off. Choose where you get your news updates from very carefully.
- 7 Find the right people to talk to. (Yes, the 'helping or harming' test applies to the people in your life too). Share your thoughts and feelings, but don't get swept up in pointless speculation. Stick to the facts and avoid the drama. Keep asking yourself, 'Is this conversation helping or harming me in my quest to feel good and function as best I can right now?'
- 8 Help yourself by helping others. This takes the attention off ourselves and we all need to feel useful and needed right now. The research is unequivocal: being able to give as well as receive is hugely important for our life satisfaction. How can you help vulnerable neighbours, colleagues, friends or strangers – emotionally, physically, practically?

- 9 Give your brain a break! If you tend to ruminate, ‘worry on a repeat loop’, give your poor mind a rest by deliberately choosing some absorbing activities. Use these to fill your brain so you stop thinking about Covid (or work). Whether it’s the crossword, Netflix, a new recipe, dancing, listening to music or a Podcast, reading, chatting on the phone, playing dress ups with the kids, drawing, or meditating, you’ll know your thing. Even if you can’t change them, you can still take a break from your worries each day.
- 10 Have a ‘timed wallow’. No good ever comes from ruminating or wallowing in misery and self-pity for over a minute – put a timer on, and then phone a friend or find something really distracting to do (see #9 above).
- 11 Be kind to yourself and others. Remember everyone is doing their best to navigate these exceptional times. A little kindness will go a long way. A lot of kindness is even better.
- 12 Keep safe and don’t be reckless. Stress breeds unusual behaviours and can sometimes prompt us to forget the simple things like wearing our seatbelts, stopping at red lights, using Personal Protective Equipment at work, turning off taps, and thinking it’s helpful to drink ourselves in to a stupor. It’s not. Try to stick to your usual routines – as you’ve no doubt been reminded by now, this is a marathon, not a sprint.

If over days and weeks your distress or stress symptoms are escalating, or you feel you are not coping, help and professional support is available. For more information go to:

Ministry of Health — COVID-19 Mental health and wellbeing resources.

If you are in self-isolation call Healthline first (0800 611 116).

For support with grief, anxiety, distress or mental wellbeing, you can call or text 1737 to talk with a trained counsellor for free, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Further Resources:

WATCH Dr Lucy Hone’s TED talk The Three Secrets of Resilient People
https://www.ted.com/talks/lucy_hone_3_secrets_of_resilient_people

LISTEN Real-Time Resilience, podcasts by Dr Denise Quinlan:

Staying Strong on the frontline, with Ruth Robertson

<https://nziwr.co.nz/real-time-resilience-staying-strong-on-the-frontline-with-ruth-robertson/>

The Seesaw of productivity in lockdown, with Adrienne Buckingham

<https://nziwr.co.nz/real-time-resilience-the-seesaw-of-productivity-and-other-lockdown-challenges/>

Leading teams who are WFH in challenging times, with Dr Lucy Hone

<https://nziwr.co.nz/real-time-resilience-leading-teams-who-are-working-from-home-during-challenging-times/>

Calming the Anxious Brain, with Dr Emma Woodward:

<https://nziwr.co.nz/calming-the-anxious-brain-with-dr-emma-woodward/>

READ Mental Fitness by Paul Wood :

<https://www.harpercollins.co.nz/9781775541677/mental-fitness/>

Dr Lucy Hone & Dr Denise Quinlan,
 Directors of the New Zealand Institute of Wellbeing and Resilience

NEW ZEALAND INSTITUTE OF
WELLBEING & RESILIENCE™

Share freely and widely, please acknowledge NZIWR as the source.

© 2020 - 2021 | www.nziwr.co.nz